INTRODUCTION

This section of the Directory of Jobs, Housing, and Social Services is intended to be used by housing counselors in Contra Costa, Alameda, and Santa Clara Counties advising low income people who may wish to move to a city with which they are not familiar.

Part IV of the Directory contains information about Contra Costa County and reflects the recent entrance of the Contra Costa Housing Authority into the Regional Housing Mobility Program. It is intended to be used in conjunction with Parts I, II, and III of the Directory which was first distributed in January 1981.

Richmond, San Pablo, and Pittsburg each have their own housing authority which administer the Section 8 program. These cities have not yet joined the Regional Housing Mobility Program of which this Directory is a part. Hercules does not have a Section 8 Program and has not, to date, entered into a cooperative agreement with any of the other housing authorities in the county. An entry for each of these cities is included in order to provide complete information to those people wishing to move to one of these cities.

The entry for each city contains the following information:

- o Map: a map for each city, with major thoroughfares, shopping areas, BART stations, bus routes, medical facilities, social services and colleges marked.
- o Housing: a brief description of the city, and particularly, of the housing stock in that city.
- o Shopping: a description of the neighborhood and regional shopping areas nearby. These shopping areas have been mapped, and each shoping center has a number corresponding to its number on the map. "NS" stands for neighborhood shopping, and "MS" stands for major (or regional) shopping.
- o Schools: the number of primary, intermediate and high schools in the city, and, for further information, the address and phone number of the Unified School District office for that city.
- o Child Care: the name, address, phone number, contact people and hours of the child care referrel centers for that city. Where available, a list of child care centers in the city is also included; however, the referrel centers should be contacted first.
- o Transit: information on the nearest BART stations, and on major AC Transit bus lines. Phone numbers to call for further information about routes and schedules are included.

- Social Services: where to go for housing-related problems and legal problems, and where the nearest County Department of Economic Benefits and State Unemployment Department are located. Also includes a referral number for social service agencies. The number/letter combination after the phone number is their number on the map.

- Medical Services: a list of the nearest hospitals and clinics, with codes corresponding to their codes on the map.

- Recreation: the nearest regional parks and recreation areas, community centers, libraries and neighborhood parks.

- Landlords: names and addresses of landlords and property managers who are familiar with the Section 8 Program.

Because colleges serve many jurisdictions, they are described at the end of Part IV. For the junior colleges, there is a list of the occupational fields in which courses are offered; for the four year colleges, there is a partial list of the fields in which degrees or certificates are granted. For further information, call the numbers listed.

The following sources were used for this information:

- Housing: a variety of sources, but particularly the Housing Elements of each jurisdiction's General Plan.

- Shopping: Directory of Shopping Centers in the United States and Canada, published by the National Research Bureau, Inc., Burlington, Iowa, 16th Edition, 1975.
  Updated by the local Chambers of Commerce listed in each area.

- Schools: Contra Costa Times, Sunday, February 8, 1981, pp. 16-27 and telephone contact with each school district.

- Child Care: The information was obtained from the Contra Costa Children's Council and relevant telephone books.

- Transit: The information was obtained from transit maps from BART, AC Transit, and the City of Walnut Creek.

- Social and Medical Services: ABAG, Fair Housing Directory, 1979.
  Relevant telephone books

- Recreation: The information was obtained from the California State Automobile Association's road and highway maps, and from telephone books.

- Colleges: 1979-1980 Bay Area Community College Career Guide, San Mateo County Office of Education.
  Catalogues from four year colleges.

The broader purpose of this Directory is to help expand regionwide housing mobility opportunities for low income people who may wish to move to different areas of the region for employment, health, or other reasons. Lack of knowledge about a new area is a frequent stumbling block to such mobility. Thus, this Directory, by providing basic information about shopping, social services, transit, etc., can be one aid used by counselors to help such people find housing in a suitable area.

FREMONT

Fremont is a rapidly growing city of 127,000, located in Southern Alameda County.

Approximately 75% of Fremont's housing is single and multi-family owner-occupied homes. The other 25% is multi-family rentals and a small percentage of mobile homes. Because two-thirds of the housing supply has been built since 1960, only a very small percentage of the homes are in need of some repair.

Fremont is composed of six distinct districts, dating back prior to its incorporation. The Centerville and Central Districts are, as their name implies, close to the center of the city, and near shopping, transit, and recreation. The same is true of the Irvington District, located directly south of the Fremont Central Park and Civic Center. The Mission San Jose District is located to the east of Fremont Central Park and near Ohlone College, while the Niles District is located north of the Park. The Warm Springs District, an area of primarily new subdivisions, is located southeast of the City, off Highway 680.

Shopping

As the list below indicates, Fremont contains a great many neighborhood shopping centers, as well as several regional shopping centers. The neighborhood centers cluster particularly in the Centerville and Irvington Districts, although all the Districts contain at least one neighborhood center.

There are two major shopping areas in Fremont: the Central Business District, including the Fremont Hub, located in the center of the town; and a shopping area at Highway 17 and Thornton Avenue.

Part III. Job Opportunities in the San Francisco Bay Area

Introduction

This section of the Directory contains a general description of the job opportunities in the San Francisco Bay Area. For descriptive and analytical purposes, the Bay Area has been divided into "Employment Centers." These centers were chosen on the basis of both job clusters, and patterns of commuting. They are as follows:*

ALAMEDA COUNTY

1. East Bay: Berkeley, Oakland, Alameda, San Leandro
2. Hayward-Fremont
3. Livermore

SANTA CLARA COUNTY

4. Palo Alto-Mountain View-Sunnyvale
5. Santa Clara-San Jose

* ABAG, San Francisco Bay Area Economic Profile, page 122.

The different sectors of the economy contain two major divisions: those which serve a larger-than-local market ("basic" employment); and those which serve the local market primarily ("local-serving" employment). Examples of basic industries include manufacturing, wholesale trade and Federal and State government. Examples of local-serving industries include retail trade, local professional services (such as medical), and local government. Table 1 displays these divisions.

Following this introduction is a description of the basic occupational groups, which cut across all sectors of the economy. The groups are:

- o professional and technical
- o managers, proprietors
- o sales workers
- o clerical workers
- o service workers
- o crafts workers
- o operatives
- o laborers

The basic characteristics of each group are described, including the usual education and/or training needed for such positions; other general attributes which each classification requires; the availability of entry-level positions; and general prospects for the near future.

Each employment center is then described based upon the job divisions listed in Table 1. A table for each center displays the number of jobs in each category and the percent of total employment that each category represents for that employment center. The kinds of jobs available in each category are also described. This section is meant only as a general guide to job opportunities in each employment center in the region. Basic Occupational Groups*

Professional and Technical

Occupations in this group include engineers, drafters, accountants, nurses and computer programers. Several years of education, training and experience is usually needed, with a bachelor's degree the minimum for most professional jobs. For some professional or technical work, special licenses or certificates are needed.

The outlook for professional and technical work in general is very good, particularly as service industries, where the greatest number of such workers are employed, maintain healthy growth rates. However, in the Bay Area, there is competition for most openings, especially at the entry-level.

Managers, Proprietors

This group includes such occupations as credit managers, office managers, building and apartment house managers, and restaurant proprietors and managers. Employment for managers is expected to expand at a rapid pace because the industries in which the majority work--services, trade and finance, real estate -- are growing rapidly.

Education and experience requirements vary widely. Some firms have management training programs, but competition for entry into such programs is keen. Other management positions may have less formal requirements, but a high school diploma plus several years of experience is generally necessary.

An understanding of business practices, and good mathematical and communications skills are necessary for any management position. Managers must be able to work independently, supervise employees, and handle customers and clients.

Sales Workers

Sales workers are concentrated in wholesale and retail trade, although a number are employed in finance, real estate and insurance. These latter groups are expected to grow in the near future.

Training for some types of sales work is available on the job. For some sales jobs, a college degree and/or the completion of special courses and a State licensing exam is required. All sales workers need to be able to understand the needs and viewpoints of customers, and be at ease with strangers.

* Note: The information for this section comes from State of California Employment Development Department, Annual Planning Information, San Francisco-Oakland SMSA, 1979-80, "Employment Outlook for Selected Occupations."

Openings for all types of sales work continually occur. There is usually a surplus of applicants for entry-level positions, such as that of sales clerk.

Clerical Workers

The largest occupational category in the Bay Area is clerical workers. In the East Bay center for example, one out of every 5 jobs is clerical. Clerical personnel are employed in every industry division, and are concentrated in the government, trade, and services industries. Jobs include secretary, clerk-typist, bookkeeper, accounting clerk, and shipping and receiving clerk.

Employers usually prefer applicants with high-school diplomas, or the equvalent. On-the job training is common for entry-level occupations, such as teller, receptionist and clerk typist. Additional training is necessary to develop the skills required for secretaries, accounting clerks, bookkeepers and computer programers.

Anticipated job growth means the prospect for such workers is excellent. People with special skills, such as word processing and keypunch operating, are in particular demand. Competition for entry-level positions is usually stiff among inexperienced applicants, however.

Service Workers

In the Bay Area, service workers are the third largest occupational category, after clerical and professional-technical groups. Service workers are waiters and waitresses, cooks, barbers, security guards, and janitors. Jobs are concentrated in business and health services, eating and drinking places, and government (especially fire and police services).

High school education is usually not necessary, and skill levels required vary widely. Cooks are highly skilled, while waiters/waitresses, kitchen help and janitors have skills which can be quickly learned. Licensing or certification is necessary for workers such as barbers, cosmetologists, some nurses' aides and home health aides.

High turnover combined with vigorous growth expected in business and health services, and eating and drinking places, will result in continued strong demand for service workers. Demand for fire and police workers in local government is expected to remain limited, however. In addition, there is usually a surplus of partially qualified applicants for most service occupations.

Crafts Workers

Crafts workers are skilled workers in such occupations as machinist, mechanic, and dental-laboratory technician. Most work in the following sectors: manufacturing, construction, transportation, and public utilities.

Many crafts positions require a high school diploma or its equivalent, and additional course work from vocational schools or community colleges. There are formal apprenticeship programs for many of these occupations, which combine classwork and on-the-job training.

Although the industries in which crafts occupations are concentrated are not growing rapidly, some industry expansion, plus the need to replace workers, point to a favorable outlook for the skilled worker.

Operatives

Operatives include such workers as electronics assemblers, welders, truck and bus drivers, service station attendents, and sewing machine operators. Almost one half of all operatives are employed in the manufacturing division. There are also concentrations in trade, transportation and public utilities.

Generally, the work may be mastered in a few days, or at most, several months. Some growth in manufacturing, as well as turnover, will create job openings; however, there is generally a surplus of inexperienced applicants seeking operative work.

Laborers

Major occupations in this category are gardener and groundskeeper, stock handler, freight handler, and construction laborer. The largest employment concentrations are found in trade, transportation and public utilities sectors.

Skill levels required vary widely. Positions such as gardeners, or construction workers, require a knowledge which can be learned through courses or developed on the job. Formal education is usually not required.

There is a chronic oversupply of qualified laborers in the Bay Area. This oversupply is not expected to lessen as automatic or computerized systems of handling materials, and similar technological innovations, continue to restrict employment expansion.

1. EAST BAY EMPLOYMENT CENTER

The East Bay employment center consists of commercial and industrial areas in Berkeley, Oakland, Alameda, and San Leandro. Industrial activities are generally located near the Bay. South Shore, Bay Fair, and Eastmont are major shopping centers. Central business districts in all of the East Bay cities and commercial uses along major thoroughfares such as Telegraph Avenue and East 14th Street account for the majority of the East Bay's commercial activities.

The largest employers in the area are the University of California and the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory. Major corporate headquarters include Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical, Kaiser Industries, Clorox, and Rucher. All are located in Oakland. [1]

Summary

Almost all recent employment growth in the East Bay Center has been in the "other" local serving category: construction; local and suburban transit; electric, gas and sanitary services; banking; insurance; real estate; and local government. Today, this sector employs more people than any other sector in the East Bay. A wide diversity of occupations are included in this job category, including craft workers and operatives, clerical workers and professionals.

Although heavy industry has been declining in the East Bay these losses have been offset by recent industrial development around the Oakland International Airport, and the expansion of the Port of Oakland. More than half of the jobs in this sector are as craft workers and operatives. Clerical workers comprise 15% of the work force, as do professional and technical workers. Finally retail trade is an important employment category in the East Bay. Sales workers, clerical staff, and managers and proprietors are the important occupations within this category. Although retail trade declined somewhat from 1975 to 1978, growth is expected to be moderate in the near future.

Manufacturing

Manufacturing accounts for 18% of the total employment in the East Bay employment center. The highest number of occupations are in the following areas:

(A) Heavy Industry:
  - paper
  - chemicals
  - petroleum refining
  - rubber and plastic products
  - stone, clay, glass and concrete products
  - primary metal industries

(B) Metal fabrication and machinery

(C) Food processing

SOURCE: ABAG, Employment and Income Subarea Data, Economic Profile Project.

Approximately 55% of the jobs in manufacturing are as crafts workers and operatives. Clerical workers comprise 15% of the employees in manufacturing, as do professional and technical workers. Managers, sales workers, service workers and laborers comprise the remainder of the work force in these industries. [2]

Basic manufacturing in the East Bay lost employment from 1965 to 1975. However, since 1975 such losses have been offset by recent industrial development around the Oakland International Airport, and the expansion of the Port of Oakland. [3]

"Other" Local Serving

The "other" local-serving category is also an important employment sector in the East Bay. The industries in this category are diverse, and include the following:

- construction
- local and suburban transit
- electric, gas and sanitary services
- banking
- insurance
- real estate
- local government

Construction industries employ the following proportions of occupational groups [4]:

craft workers - 49%
professional and technical workers - 12%
managers - 12%
clerical workers - 11%
laborers - 8%
sales, operatives, service workers - 8%

Transportation and public utilities employ the following [5]:

clerical and sales workers - 29%
craft workers - 21%
operatives - 18%
professional and technical workers - 12%
managers - 8%
laborers and service workers - 12%

Finance, insurance and real estate employ the following [6]:

clerical workers - 48%
managers - 21%
sales workers - 20%
other - 11%

Since 1965, almost all employment growth within this region has been in this sector. In 1965, it had the lowest share of total employment of all occupational categories, but by 1978, it employed more people than any other sector in the East Bay Center. [7]

Retail Trade

Retail trade accounts for 14% of all employees in the East Bay employment center. Retail trade includes food stores, apparel stores, automotive dealers and gasoline service stations, furniture stores, restaurants and bars. Major occupations within retail trade are sales workers (approximately 25% of the labor force), clerical staff, and managers, officials and proprietors. [8]

Retail trade lost a considerable number of jobs from 1975 to 1978, although the increase in tourism has encouraged job growth. However, hiring in this sector is expected to be only moderate in the near future.

Other Local-Serving Industries

Retail services account for approximately 10% of the employment in the East Bay Center. This sector includes hotels, repair services, and amusement and recreation services. It employs a large percentage of service, clerical and technical workers, and smaller numbers of managers and proprietors. This sector has experienced job growth in the last several years, and employment is expected to rise over the next several years.

Professional services also account for approximately 10% of East Bay employment. Medical and other health services, legal services, and educational services (except 4 year colleges) are included in this sector. As would be expected, professional and technical workers account for a large proportion--nearly half--of the employment. Clerical and service workers are also significant occupations. [9]

This sector is expected to experience moderate growth in the near future.

Other Significant Employment Sectors

Long-distance transportation has shown a great deal of growth since 1965. The Port of Oakland is now the largest port facility in the region in terms of total tonnage shipped, excluding petroleum. [10] Significant occupations in this sector are crafts workers, operatives, and clerical workers. [11] Wholesale trade, and federal and state governments have also shown job growth since 1965, but government jobs are expected to decline slightly in the future.

2. HAYWARD-FREMONT EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

Industries which have been expanding the most rapidly in the Hayward-Fremont employment center are the diverse group of occupations in the "Basic Non-Manufacturing" category. Long-distance transportation, wholesale trade, institutional services and the federal and state government employment classifications more than doubled in the period 1965 to 1978. Warehousing and trucking, building suppliers, several colleges and California State University have accounted for about 9,500 new jobs in this center.[1] Transportation and wholesale trade employ a large percentage of operatives and clerical workers. General Motors is also a major employer. The colleges and University employ a broad spectrum of workers, from professionals to laborers. The Fremont Hub, and Southland Mall are regional shopping centers.

The retail trade and retail services sectors together employed more than a third of the center's workers in 1975. Employment in each of these sectors has increased over 75% since 1965. Retail services includes hotels, automobile repair, amusement and recreation services, while retail trade includes most retail stores and restaurants. Clerical, sales, and service occupations dominate these two industries, which also include smaller percentages of operatives, and managers and proprietors.

The "other local serving" industries--construction, transportation, communication, banking, insurance and real estate--accounted for 19% of the center's employment in 1975. Craft workers, operatives and clerical workers make up the largest percentage of occupations in this sector. Manufacturing accounts for 17% of the employment in the Hayward-Fremont sector. Both heavy industry, and metal fabrication, equipment and machinery are important manufacturing sectors. Over half the employees in these industries are craft workers and operatives.

Local-Serving Industries

Local-serving industries employ two-thirds of the workers in the Hayward-Fremont employment center. Approximately one-third of these workers are in the retail trade sector. Sales workers comprise over 25% of all the employees in retail trade. Service and clerical workers each comprise approximately 20% of the employees, and managers and proprietors comprise approximately 15% of all employees in this sector.[2]

The "other" local-serving sector also employs about a third of the employees in the Hayward-Fremont local-serving sector. The industries in this category are diverse, and include the following

- construction
- local and suburban transit
- electric, gas and sanitary services
- banking
- insurance

- o real estate
- o local government

Construction industries employ the following proportions of occupational groups:[3]

craft workers - 50%
managers, officials, proprietors - 13%
professional and technical workers - 11%
clerical workers - 11%
laborers - 6%
sales, operatives, service workers - 9%

Transportation and public utilities employ the following:[4]

clerical and sales workers - 27%
craft workers - 21%
operatives - 18%
professional and technical workers - 13%
managers - 9%
laborers and service workers - 12%

Finance, insurance and real estate employ the following:[5]

clerical workers - 46%
managers, officials, proprietors - 21%
sales workers - 22%
all others - 11%

Basic Non-Manufacturing

Although local-serving industries employ the largest number of people in the Hayward-Fremont center, the basic non-manufacturing sector has increased the most rapidly since 1965. Industries which increased more than 100% are the federal and state governments (California State University at Hayward accounts for most of the job growth in this area), wholesale trade, long-distance transportation and institutional services. Both wholesale trade and long-distance transportation employ a large percentage of operatives, and clerical and sales workers. Institutional services refers to 4 year colleges and universities, museums, art galleries, zoological and botanical gardens. These industries employ a large percentage of professional and technical workers, as well as smaller percentages of clerical and sales staff managers, and laborers (e.g., groundskeepers).

Manufacturing

In this sector, miscellaneous manufacturing and heavy industry each experienced significant growth rates from 1965 to 1975, while food processing declined, losing over 1400 jobs.[6] Approximately 55% of the jobs in manufacturing are as crafts workers and operatives. Clerical workers comprise 15% of the employees, as do professional and technical workers. Managers, sales workers, service workers and laborers comprise the remainder of the work force in manufacturing[7].

3. LIVERMORE EMPLOYMENT CENTER

This employment center includes all of Livermore and the eastern part of Pleasanton. The largest employers are the Lawrence Livermore and the Sandia Laboratories.[1]

Summary

In the basic manufacturing sector, heavy industry and miscellaneous manufacturing showed substantial increases from 1965 to 1975. However, basic manufacturing accounted for only 6% of all employment in 1975. More important categories in this employment center are institutional services (the two laboratories mentioned above), which employ a large percentage of professional workers; retail trade, which employs a large proportion of clerical and sales workers, and "other" local-serving industries (construction, transportation, communication, banking, local government).

Basic Non-Manufacturing

The basic non-manufacturing sector comprises more than half the employment in the Livermore center. Most important in this sector is institutional services, which accounts for over one-third of all the employment in the center. Although the institutional services category includes four year colleges and universities, museums, art galleries, botanical and zoological gardens, the bulk of the employment in this category is accounted for by the Lawrence Livermore and Sandia Laboratories. The majority of employees in these two laboratories are professional and technical workers. The institutional sector as a whole has shown modest growth over the last several years.

Business services employ about 8 percent of the workers in Livermore, but this sector has grown far more rapidly than any other sector--an astounding 1550% from 1965 to 1975. This sector consists of establishments rendering services (not classified elsewhere) to businesses, such as advertising, building maintenance services, equipment leasing services, employment services, management and consulting services, and computer and data processing services. Thus, this sector consists of a wide variety of occupational groupings, from professional and technical workers to clerical workers and operatives.

Wholesale trade and long-distance transportation have also increased at a rapid rate since 1965. Both these sectors employ a large percentage of operatives and clerical workers.

Local-Serving Industries

Local-serving industries account for slightly over one-third of the employment in the Livermore center. Retail trade increased in employment over 100% from 1965 to 1975. Sales workers comprise over 25% of all the employees in retail trade. Service and clerical workers each comprise approximately 20% of the employees, and managers and proprietors comprise approximately 15% of employees.[2] The new Stoneridge Shopping Center in Pleasanton provides jobs in the retail sector for this area.

Professional services--medical, legal and educational--also increased over 100% from 1965 to 1975. This sector employs primarily professional and technical, clerical, and service workers.

Manufacturing

Heavy industry (e.g., chemicals, plastics, petroleum) increased nearly 300% from 1965 to 1975, and is the largest manufacturing sector in Livermore. Miscellaneous manufacturing (clothing, lumber and wood products, leather products) increased 100% during this same period. Fifty-five percent of the employees in these industries are crafts workers and operatives. Clericals, and professional and technical workers, each comprise 15% of the labor force.[3] However, only 16% of the Livermore labor force is engaged in manufacturing industries.

4. PALO ALTO - MOUNTAIN VIEW - SUNNYVALE EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

The most striking characteristic of the Palo Alto - Mountain View - Sunnyvale employment center is its concentration of high technology industries. The number of employees in this sector increased nearly 100% from 1965 to 1975. In 1975, high technology employees comprised one-third of the total labor force in the Palo Alto employment center. Twenty-five to 40% of the employees are professional and technical workers, approximately 20% are sales and clerical workers, 20% are operatives and another 10% are craft workers. [1] Major employers include Lockheed, Hewlett-Packard and Stanford University.

In the local-serving industries, professional services increased 150% from 1965 to 1975. This sector includes medical, legal and educational services, and employs a large percentage of professional, technical and clerical workers. The retail trade and retail services sectors have also shown considerable growth in recent years. These sectors employ a large proportion of clerical, sales and service workers. Major shopping centers include Mayfield Mall, San Antonio Shopping Center and the Stanford Shopping Center.

Manufacturing

Manufacturing accounts for 36% of the total employment in the Palo Alto - Mountain View - Sunnyvale employment center. Eighty-six percent of this manufacturing activity is in high technology industries. Such industries manufacture the following products:

- Aerospace and ordnance: composed primarily of completed guided missiles.
- Office and computing machinery: typewriters, calculators, computers.
- Electrical machinery, equipment and supplies: this group includes electronic components, electric transmission equipment, communication equipment, household appliances, and radio and television sets.
- Professional and scientific instruments: includes photographic equipment, watches and clocks, measuring instruments. [2]

These industries expanded nearly 100% from 1965 to 1975, and will continue to grow.

Professional and technical workers comprise a higher proportion in these industries compared with other manufacturing industries: 25 to 40%, versus only 10 to 20% of the workers in other manufacturing industries. [3] Specific professional and technical occupations which show good growth potential are electronics engineer, electronics technician, drafters, and computer programers. Engineers conduct research and development activities involving the design, manufacture and testing of electronic components and systems. They typically need a Bachelor's degree in electrical or electronics engineering, and an advanced degree for research and development work, as well as for many higher-level positions. In addition, engineers need good communications skills, both oral and written. [4]

Electronics technicians typically calibrate, test, troubleshoot and repair electronic systems and components. The outlook for technicians with Associate of Arts/Associate of Science degrees and one year of experience is particularly good. However, inexperienced graduates of two year training programs are often able to find employment. [5]

Drafters make precision drawings from the sketches and verbal instructions of engineers. Requirements vary by employer, from a high school degree plus considerable drafting experience, to an A.A. degree or training in a trade school plus less drafting experience. [6]

Computer programmers write logical instructions ("programs") which tell computers the order of steps to be taken to solve problems or process information. Most employers require a Bachelor's degree and one to five years experience, while some employers require a Masters degree. Some employers will hire persons with an A.A. degree and several years of experience. [7]

Sales and clerical workers comprise approximately 20% of high technology employees. [8] In the clerical field, data-entry operators, who prepare data for entry into computers, are in particular demand. Most employers prefer applicants to have a high school diploma or the equivalent. There are entry-level positions available, however, for individuals with good typing skills and clerical experience. [9]

Finally, craft workers and operatives comprise approximately 30% of the workers in high technology manufacturing. [10] Semiconductor processors, electronics assemblers, electronics testers, electronics mechanics and semiconductor assemblers are all in particular demand in these industries. There are opportunities for entry-level work in these occupations, while the outlook for persons with experience is particularly good. [11]

The other employment sectors in the Palo Alto centers -- basic non-manufacturing, and local-serving industries -- also showed substantial growth from 1965 to 1975. This is particularly true of industries which serve the needs of both the high technology manufacturers, and their employees. For example, retail trade, retail services, and professional services, each comprising approximately 10% of total employment, each increased from 60 to 150% during the 1965 to 1975 period. These industries all employ a large percentage of clerical, technical, sales and service workers. Demand for these workers is high in these fields, which include retail stores; restaurants; hotels; amusement and recreation; and medical, legal and educational services (excluding 4 year colleges).

5. SANTA CLARA - SAN JOSE EMPLOYMENT CENTER

The Santa Clara - San Jose employment center is an area of diversified economic activity. The City of Santa Clara supports a concentration of electronics firms, including the headquarters of Memorex and National Semiconductor. The largest industrial employers in San Jose are General Electric, IBM and FMC. California Financial, one of the nations largest non-industrial companies, also has its corporate headquarters in San Jose. Industry is concentrated in north San Jose and in the Coyote area, while high technology industry has centered in the City of Santa Clara. [1] Mayor Shopping Centers include Eastridge, Oakridge and Stevens Creek Shopping Centers.

Summary

Manufacturing accounts for 25% of the labor force in this area. Metal fabrication, machinery and equipment is the largest classification in manufacturing. The number of employees in this industry increased 200% from 1965 to 1975. Significant occupations are craft workers, operatives, clerical workers, and professional and technical workers.

High technology manufacturing, centered in Santa Clara, increased 100% from 1965 to 1975. As described in the previous chapter on the Palo Alto-Mountain View-Sunnyvale employment center, high technology manufacturing employs a greater percentage of professional and technical workers than other kinds of manufacturing.

Other important sectors in this employment center are retail trade, and the "other" local-serving category. This latter category is composed of a diversity of industries, including construction, transportation services, electric, gas and sanitary services, local banking, insurance and real estate. Occupations within these categories are concentrated in the clerical, sales, and operatives professions.

Manufacturing

The Santa Clara-San Jose employment center contains a variety of manufacturing industries. Metal fabrication and equipment accounts for nearly half of the manufacturing employment in this center. The number of employees tripled from 1965 to 1975. High technology manufacturing accounts for 25% of the manufacturing jobs in this center. The number of jobs within this industry doubled from 1965 to 1975. Food processing industries declined significantly from 1965 to 1975. High technology industries are concentrated in Santa Clara, while other manufacturing is concentrated in San Jose.

Twenty-five to 40% of the high technology jobs are in professional and technical occupations, 20% are in sales and clerical, 20% are in operatives; and 10% are in craft occupations (see the previous chapter for more detail on high technology industries). Other types of manufacturing employ a lower percentage of professional and technical workers, and a higher percentage of crafts workers and operatives, depending on the particular industry.

In the basic non-manufacturing sector, wholesale trade increased 100% from 1965 to 1975. Part of this rise was due to increased distribution of electronic goods. Significant occupations in this sector include craft workers and operatives, sales and clerical occupations, and managers, proprietors and officials. Expansion of this sector is expected to continue at a moderate pace. [2]

In the local-serving sector, retail trade and "other" services each increased by about 75% from 1965 to 1975. Retail trade includes stores, restaurants, and automotive dealers. "Other" local services include construction, transportation, communication services, and local financial, insurance and real estate services.

Retail trade employs a large percentage of sales workers, as well as service and clerical workers. Retail growth is expected to be slower than it has been, since the buying power of consumers has declined with the current rate of inflation. In general, however, the outlook for retailers in this employment center is positive. This is primarily due to a high per capita income level, and sustained population growth. [3]

The "other" local services are a diverse group, employing the following kinds of workers:

o Construction: craft workers - 58% operatives and laborers - 17%
managers - 12%
all others - 12%

Due to rapid industrial expansion, there is a strong demand for residential construction in this area. However, a tight and expensive money market has slowed construction considerably and will continue to influence future construction. [4] oTransportation and Public Utilities:

operatives - 28%
clerical workers - 24%
craft workers - 21%
managers and proprietors - 11%
professional and technical workers - 10%
all others - 6%

Over the next several years, communications and public utilities employment will rise moderately to meet the demand generated by population growth. Transportation and warehousing will also increase moderately. However, many of these industries typically utilize technological advances (such as computerized services) to allow them to serve more users without significant payroll increases. [5]

oFinance, Insurance and Real Estate:

clerical workers - 36%
sales workers - 33%
managers, officials, proprietors - 23%
all others - 8%

This sector has grown rapidly in the past several years, benefiting from the growth in the local economy, and a high demand for housing. Growth is expected to continue, but at a slower pace. High interest rates and limited availability of money in particular will reduce the activity of lending institutions and affect the real estate industry. The slowdown of the economy will also moderate the growth of the insurance industry. [6]

6. RICHMOND EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

Major industries in the Richmond employment center include the oil and chemical companies and the Port of Richmond. Some of the largest basic manufacturing employers are Chevron and Union Oil, as well as the Chevron Research and Chemical Companies.[1] The majority of jobs in this sector are in the operative and craft worker categories.

The public sector also represents a significant source of jobs in Richmond. The Social Security Administration, Amtrak and the Post Office all operate major facilities here.[2] The majority of jobs in these industries are clerical.

Manufacturing

In 1965, basic manufacturing was the leading employment sector in the Richmond center. By 1978, manufacturing had declined to the smallest of the three employment sectors. All kinds of manufacturing except miscellaneous manufacturing decreased their share of total jobs. The greatest job losses were in heavy industry and food processing.[3] For the future, modest increases are expected in electronics, fabricated metal products, and electrical equipment and supplies.[4] The majority of occupations in these industries are as operatives and crafts workers, although the high technology industries also have a significant percentage of professional and technical workers.

Basic Non-Manufacturing

In this sector, long-distance transportation decreased its payrolls considerably from 1965 to 1978. However, these losses were offset by gains in wholesale trade, and federal government employment (the opening of the bulk mail center, and the social security office).[5]

Wholesale trade, which employs primarily operatives, crafts workers, clerical and sales workers, is expected to increase moderately as Contra Costa County continues to develop as a commercial and business center.[6] Federal government employment, (primarily clerical occupations) is expected to remain stable or decrease, and most openings will result only from replacement needs.[7]

Local-Serving Industries

Retail trade and services increased moderately from 1965 to 1975. This sector is expected to record modest increases for eating and drinking places, while firms selling high-priced goods (appliances, furniture, automobiles) may decline slightly.[8] Hilltop and El Cerrito Plaza supply many of the retail jobs in this area.

The professional services category also increased modestly from 1965 to 1975, particularly in the health care field, with the building of the Kaiser Medical Center. Health services are expected to grow at a slower pace in the future.[9]

7. PITTSBURG-ANTIOCH EMPLOYMENT CENTER PROFILE

The Pittsburg-Antioch employment center has traditionally functioned as a manufacturing center. The largest industrial employers in this area are U.S.Steel, Crown Zellerbach, Dow Chemical and Dupont.[1] Over one-third of the workers in the center are employed in manufacturing, the majority of them as crafts workers and operatives.

Local-serving industries--retail trade and services, construction, finance, real estate--are also important sectors of the economy, and have increased their share of jobs in this center since 1965. Occupational categories in these industries are diverse, ranging from operatives, to clerical, service and sales workers.

Manufacturing

In 1965, basic manufacturing accounted for over half of the employment in the Pittsburg-Antioch center. By 1978, manufacturing had lost 2,300 employees, and had declined to the second largest employment sector in this center. These losses were largely in heavy industry and food processing.[2] However, manufacturing still employs over one-third of the workers in this center. Over half of these workers are in the crafts and operative occupational categories.

Local-Serving Industries

The "other" local serving sector has grown rapidly since 1965. It employed 17% of the center's workers in 1975. Construction employment in particular has expanded, and although residential building has declined somewhat, commercial construction is still relatively strong[3]. The majority of the jobs in construction are as crafts workers. Retail trade is the second largest industry in the local-serving sector, employing 14% of the center's workers. However, this category has not grown as rapidly as the "other" category. Sales, clerical and service occupations make up the bulk of retail employment.

Basic Non-Manufacturing

This sector is the least important in the Pittsburg-Antioch center, employing only 13% of the center's workers in all basic non-manufacturing categories. The categories showing the most growth are wholesale trade, institutional services (e.g., college, museums) and the federal and state government. The government category is expected to decline or remain stable, while wholesale trade is expected to increase its payrolls moderately over the next several years.

8. WALNUT CREEK-CONCORD EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

The Walnut Creek-Concord employment center serves as a major suburban retail center in central Contra Costa County. Nearly three-quarters of its employment is in the local-serving sector. Both retail trade and retail services have shown significant employment growth since 1965. Both of these categories employ a large percentage of clerical, sales and service workers.[1] Sun Valley is the major regional shopping center in this area.

In the basic non-manufacturing sector, federal and state government showed the largest employment increase for the years 1965 to 1975. Most federal employees work in the Post Office, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the Veteran's Administration.[2] In general, office jobs in the basic non-manufacturing sector--finance, insurance and business services--are expected to grow over the next 5 years as employers move out of San Francisco to the Walnut Creek-Concord center.

In basic manufacturing, heavy industry--including the chemical, petroleum and plastics industries--is the largest employer. The second largest employer is metal fabrication, machinery and transportation equipment. These two groups increased substantially from 1965 to 1975. Crafts workers and operatives comprise the majority of workers in these categories.

Local-Serving Industries

Retail trade is the largest industry division in this sector, and is among the fastest growing. Major occupations in this industry are in the clerical, sales and service categories. Gains in retail employment will be led by restaurants, fast food franchises and bars. Firms selling higher-priced goods, such as appliances and automobiles, are not expected to expand as rapidly.

The "other" local-serving category employs approximately one-quarter of all employees in this employment center. Construction employment recorded an all-time high for 1979, which was moderated in 1980 by the decline in residential construction. Residential construction is expected to pick up again in 1981, and small additions to payrolls will occur.[4] Craft workers make up the majority of employees in this industry.

Another important group of industries in the "other" category is finance, insurance and real estate. These have been some of the fastest growing industries in this employment center; however, their rate of growth is expected to slow considerably over the next several years. Clerical and sales workers comprise the majority of employees in this industry.[5]

Basic Non-Manufacturing

The federal and state governments employ the largest percentage of workers in this sector, which has increased rapidly since 1965. Growth is expected to level off, however, and employment is expected to decline in 1980 and 1981.[6] Clerical workers comprise a large proportion of government employees.

Business services--e.g., building maintenance, employment services, computer services, management consulting--more than doubled their employees from 1965 to 1975. The same is true of institutional services (for example, four year colleges, museums, art galleries).

Wholesale trade is also an important industry in the basic non-manufacturing sector. Since 1965, job totals have more than doubled. During 1980 and 1981, payrolls are expected to increase moderately as the whole county continues to develop as a business and commercial center.[7]

Manufacturing

Although representing less than 10% of this employment center's workers, the manufacturing sector has shown a steady increase since 1965. Heavy industry (e.g., petroleum, chemicals, plastics), metal fabrication, and machinery, and the miscellaneous category (which includes apparel, furniture, and leather products) have increased the most rapidly. The majority of employees in these industries are in the craft and operative occupational categories.

9. VALLEJO-MARTINEZ EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

The Vallejo-Martinez employment center is primarily a basic non-manufacturing and local-serving employment center. Within basic non-manufacturing, federal and state government is the largest employment classification, while the Mare Island Naval Shipyard is the single largest employer of civilian workers. Federal and state employment is expected to remain stable over the next several years.[1]

In the local-serving employment sector, local government and health services employ the most people. Kaiser Hospital and the school district are Vallejo's major employers. Martinez is the Contra Costa Government seat, and employs approximately 6,000 people in local government.[2]

Local-Serving Industries

Local-serving industries account for about half of the employment in the Vallejo-Martinez center. The "other" category is the largest, with nearly 20% of the center's employees. It contains the following occupational categories:

- Construction

  craft workers - 50%
  professional and technical workers - 11%
  managers - 13%
  clerical workers - 11%
  all others - 15%

As in other employment centers in the Bay Area, the construction industry is very sensitive to a tight money market and high interest rates. Residential construction--and construction payrolls--is expected to drop in 1980, but should pick up in 1981 due to the strong demand for housing. Commercial and industrial building should remain active over the next several years.[3]

- Transportation

  clerical and sales workers - 27%
  craft workers - 21%
  operatives - 18%
  professional and technical workers - 13%
  laborers and service workers - 12%
  managers - 9%

Transportation payrolls are expected to increase in the next several years, although trucking and warehousing will suffer from the downturn in the economy and the loss of some clerical jobs to computerization. Public utilities employment will increase only slightly in the near future.[4]

o Finance, Insurance and Real Estate

clerical workers - 46%
sales workers - 22%
managers, officials, proprietors - 21%
all others - 11%

This group of industries expanded rapidly in 1979, especially the banking sector. Although this expansion is expected to continue over the next several years, the rate will decline as the economy slows down.[5]

The retail trade and services sectors employ approximately 21% of the center's workers. Retail services includes hotels, automobile repair, amusement and recreation services, while retail trade includes most retail stores. Clerical, service and sales occupations dominate these two sectors, which also include smaller percentages of operatives, and managers and proprietors. Retail services declined slightly during 1965 to 1975, while retail trade increased during these years by 43%.

Professional services--health, legal and educational--also increased moderately from 1965 to 1975. These industries employ primarily service, clerical, and professional and technical workers. Health services are expected to expand the most rapidly in this sector in the near future.

Basic Non-Manufacturing

Federal and state government accounts for approximately one-quarter of all employment in the Vallejo-Martinez center, although it has declined slightly since 1965. Government payrolls are expected to remain stable or decline over the next several years.[6]

Wholesale trade is also an important economic sector, which has increased in employment by 64% since 1965. It is expected to increase at a slower pace in the next several years. Significant occupations in wholesale trade include clerical workers, sales workers, managers and proprietors, and operatives.[7]

Manufacturing

Basic manufacturing has had the lowest share of total employment since 1965. This sector employs the following occupational groups:[9]

operatives - 32%
craft workers - 22%
clerical workers - 15%
professional and technical workers - 14%
all others - 17%

Heavy industry and oil refineries grew substantially in this employment sector from 1965 to 1970, but contracted back to 1965 levels between 1970 and 1975. Similarly, metal fabrication, machinery, and transportation equipment grew from 1965 to 1970, and lost these gains from 1970 to 1975. Food processing has consistently lost employment since 1965.[8] By 1975, manufacturing accounted for only 14% of the workforce in the Vallejo-Martinez employment center, with the largest concentrations in heavy industry (e.g., petroleum, rubber, plastics, chemicals) and food processing.

10. FAIRFIELD-VACAVILLE EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

Important employment sectors in this area are the "other" local-serving industries (construction, local transportation, finance, insurance, real estate), retail trade, and federal and state government employment. Each sector contains approximately 20% of the total employment.

The "other" local-serving industries employ a variety of occupations, including operatives, crafts workers and clerical workers. These industries increased a modest 35% from 1965 to 1975.

Retail trade employs primarily sales and service workers, and is the largest source of new jobs in this center.[1]

The number of federal and state government jobs has declined since 1965. However, this remains an important employment category and represented almost 18% of the total jobs in 1975. This figure does not include military personnel at Travis Air Force Base, one of the region's major military facilities.[2] Apart from the military, the California Medical Facility in Vacaville is the largest employer in this center.[3]

Local-Serving Industries

Local-serving industries account for 60% of the total employment in the Fairfield-Vacaville employment center. Retail trade accounts for approximately one-third of local-serving employment. Service, sales and clerical workers account for the majority of occupations in retail trade. The strongest growth has been in food stores and eating and drinking establishments. This growth trend is expected to continue over the next several years as tourism, and the trend towards dining out continue, and as residential development occurs in this area.[4]

"Other" local-serving industries are also an important sector in the economy. They include the following industries:

- Construction

  crafts workers - 56%
  laborers - 12%
  managers, proprietors - 12%
  all others - 20%

Construction growth is expected to moderate, but will continue in Solano County, due to relatively low land costs. Industrial and commercial building will provide the bulk of new jobs in this employment center.[5]

- Transporation and Public Utilities

  operatives - 26%
  craft workers - 24%

clerical workers - 24%
all others - 26%

Due to expanding population and continued industrial growth, these industries have increased substantially in the last several years. Employment growth is expected to continue, but at a slower pace. Emplyment growth in the public utilities field will show the greatest decline.[6]

o Finance, Insurance, Real Estate

clerical - 44%
managers, officials, proprietors - 25%
sales - 24%
all others - 7%

Employment in this industry group increased by 100% between 1978 and 1979, with the growth taking place primarily in the finance sector. Growth is expected to continue, again primarily in the finance sector.[7]

Government

Government employment accounts for over 80% of the workers in the basic non-manufacturing sector. In 1979, government payrolls fell, particularly at the federal level. The outlook for government employment remains unclear.[8]

Manufacturing

Manufacturing employs the following occupations:

craft workers - 36%
operatives - 28%
professional and technical - 13%
clerical - 12%
others - 11%

Although employing less than 10% of the center's workers in 1975, manufacturing has expanded at a strong and steady pace since 1965. Food processing employs the largest number of workers in this employment center, but showed a 25% decline from 1965 to 1975. This decline was offset, however, by increases in metal fabrication, transportation equipment, heavy industry and high technology manufacturing.[9]

11. SAN FRANCISCO EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

The largest employment sector in San Francisco is the basic non-manufacturing sector. The largest employers in this sector are the federal and state government, and wholesale trade classifications. Since 1970, most growth has occurred in business services, related to rapid increases in office developments.[1] The majority of employers in this sector are clerical, and professional and technical, although wholesale trade employs a significant percentage of operatives and laborers.

The "other" local-serving sector is the second largest employment sector in San Francisco. Construction, finance, insurance and real estate account for the growth of this sector. These industries are also related to office development.[2]

Basic Non-Manufacturing

Within this sector, business services showed the largest employment increase from 1965 to 1975. Business services include such industries as advertising, building maintenance services, equipment leasing services, employment services, management and consulting services, and computer and data processing services. Major occupational groupings are clerical workers, professional and technical workers, and operatives. This sector is expected to be the primary source of new jobs in the city over the next several years.[3]

Long-distance transportation, employing primarily operatives, clerical workers, and laborers, also increased from 1965 to 1975. Wholesale trade, however, declined during this period.

Local-Serving Industries

Professional services--medical, legal and educational--increased substantially over the years 1965 to 1975. Major occupations in these fields are clerical workers, service workers, and professional and technical workers.

Retail trade expanded substantially in 1978, due to the increase in tourism, but has leveled off since then. No substantial further expansion is expected.[4] Major occupations in this field are clerical workers and sales workers.

Construction will continue to expand in San Francisco because most of the projects are commercial, demand for which remains high. Thus, the industry won't be as strongly affected by the downturn in residential construction as it will be in other employment centers in the Bay Area.[5]

The finance, insurance, and real estate industries have been one of the fastest-growing groups in the City. Their growth rates are expected to continue, but to be more modest over the next several years.[6] Major occupational groups in these industries are clerical and sales workers.

Manufacturing

Manufacturing in San Francisco has been declining steadily for many years. Since 1965, employment losses have been particularly substantial in food processing, heavy industry, and printing and publishing. This trend is expected to continue.

12. SANTA ROSA EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

Santa Rosa is primarily a local-serving employment center. In 1975, 70% of all jobs were in retail trade and services, and other industries of this sector. The local-serving sector employs a diverse group of occupations, including sales workers, clerical workers, managers, and operatives. The Coddingtown and Montgomery Village Shopping Centers are the two major retail centers in the area.[1]

Growth has been the strongest, however, in the basic manufacturing sector, particularly in high technology industries. By 1975, these industries were the largest employment classification within manufacturing. Hewlett-Packard is the largest high-technology employer.[2] Other manufacturing industries which have grown substantially in Santa Rosa are heavy industry, including chemical, petroleum and plastics, and metal fabrication, machinery and electrical equipment. In manufacturing as a whole in Santa Rosa, the largest occupational groups are operatives (39%), craft workers (20%) and professional and technical workers (11%).[3]

Public employment also constitutes a significant portion of Santa Rosa's employment, since Sonoma County government offices are housed here.[4]

Local-Serving Industries

Retail trade constitutes nearly one-quarter of the employment in Santa Rosa. Sales workers and service workers together constitute about half the employees in retail trade, with clerical workers, and managers, officials and proprietors also important job classifications.

The continual development of shopping centers in recent years has led to a substantial increase in retail trade payrolls. The rise in homebuilding has also spurred increases, especially in building material and furniture shops. Retail trade is expected to continue its substantial growth in the next several years.[5]

"Other" local-serving industries also constitutes about one-quarter of Santa Rosa's employment. The following industries and occupational categories are included in this sector:

- Construction

  craft workers - 59%
  managers, officials, proprietors -15%
  laborers - 9%
  operatives - 7%
  all others - 10%

Between 1976 and 1979, employment growth in the construction industry was enormous. However, homebuilding is expected to slow considerably in the 1980-81 period due to the tight money market, soaring interest rates and inflation. However, ongoing residential developments, and the commercial, industrial and public projects currently under construction, will continue to provide work over these years.[6]

- Transportation and Public Utilities

  operatives - 29%
  craft workers - 28%
  clerical workers - 22%
  all others - 21%

As in recent years, these industries will register moderate payroll additions in step with the county's population and business growth. Demand for trucking and warehousing services is expected to remain strong, while public utilities employment is expected to level off.[7]

- Finance, Insurance and Real Estate

  clerical workers - 41%
  sales workers - 31%
  managers, officials, proprietors - 19%
  all others - 9%

In the past several years, there have been healthy employment gains in finance, insurance and real estate, as facilities expanded in response to a growing population and increased commercial activity. However, reduced growth in the next two years will result from a slowdown in business expansion and in real estate sales.[8]

Basic Manufacturing

Occupational categories in manufacturing are as follows:

operatives - 39%
craft workers - 20%
professional and technical workers - 11%
clerical - 10%
managers, officials and proprietors - 10%
All others - 10%

Basic manufacturing has been the fastest-increasing sector in the Santa Rosa economy. High technology industries producing electrical and electronic instruments for consumer, commercial and industrial demand have expanded faster than any other manufacturing group. Food processing, such as wine, and convenience food production, has also increased. These industries are expected to continue their expansion.[9]

13. MARIN COUNTY EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

Employment opportunities in Marin County consist primarily of retail trade and services and other local-serving jobs. The largest employers are the County Hospital District, Pacific Telephone, and Fireman's Fund Insurance. These industries employ a variety of occupations, most importantly clerical, service workers, sales workers, and professional and technical workers.

Local-Serving Industries

Local-serving industries account for nearly three-quarters of the employment in Marin County. The largest group is the "other" group. It includes the following industries:

- Construction - residential construction is responsible for almost three-quarters of all construction jobs in Marin County. The substantial employment increases of 1978 leveled off in 1979 and 1980, due to high interest rates and a tighter money supply. However, the strong housing demand in the area increases the likelihood of construction continuing at a reasonably brisk pace in the future.

- Transportation and Public Utilities - jobs in these industries are concentrated in commercial trucking and delivery services, ambulance and cab companies, and railroads, along with communications, electric, gas and sanitary services. The number of jobs in these industries has remained fairly constant over the past several years, and is expected to remain constant in the near future.[2]

- Finance, Insurance and Real Estate - this has been one of the fastest growing groups of industries in Marin in recent years. However, employment in real estate and finance is expected to level off over the next several years, for the same reasons the construction industry will be slowing its growth--high interest rates and tight money.[3]

Retail Trade

Retail trade accounts for 20% of the employment in Marin County. The accessibility of major shopping centers and the relative affluence of the population are key factors supporting these industries.[4] Restaurants, fast-food franchises and bars will remain the primary source of new jobs in the County, although the growth rate is expected to slow somewhat over the next few years.[5] Sales and service workers are the major occupational groups within retail trade.

Other Sectors

In the basic non-manufacturing sector, both wholesale trade and institutional services (e.g., colleges, museums, art galleries) increased substantially. Manufacturing employs less than 10% of the workers in Marin County, with high technology manufacturing the largest group. The number of manufacturing jobs increased modestly from 1965 to 1975.

14. SOUTH SAN FRANCISCO - SAN FRANCISCO AIRPORT EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

The major economic activities in this employment center are long-distance transportation, wholesale trade, hotels, motels and restaurants: industries that benefit from the presence of San Francisco Airport. The Airport is the largest air facility in the region and serves as this employment center's focal point. The airlines are the largest employers in this center[1]. Major occupational categories for these industries are craft workers, operatives, clerical workers, and sales workers.

Basic Non-Manufacturing

The basic non-manufacturing sector accounted for 45% of this center's employment in 1975. Over half of this employment is in long-distance transportation. Air transportation is the major component of this sector. The Southern Pacific Railroad is also an important component.

The expansion of the airport in the late 1970s has tapered off, however, although growth should continue at a modest pace.[2] Significant occupations in air transportation are craft workers, operatives, clerical workers and sales workers.

Wholesale trade is also an important industry in this employment center: approximately 13% of the workers are employed in this category. Employment has grown steadily in recent years, and should continue. The majority of occupations are in the operative, clerical and sales categories.

Local-Serving Industries

The "other" local-serving industries tripled their number of employees in this center in the period 1965 to 1975. Construction of non-residential projects has been expanding, and is expected to continue. However, residential construction is expected to decrease.[3]

The most rapidly expanding industries in the "other" sector are finance, insurance and real estate, all of which employ a large percentage of clerical and sales workers. Generally, industry expansion has been the result of increases in business activity and in the local population. Thus, job growth is expected to slow down in the next several years, as the rate of business growth declines. Most new jobs will be concentrated in the finance sector.[4]

Retail trade, which employs approximately 10% of this center's workers has grown moderately in recent years. Most of the new hiring has been by apparel shops, restaurants and fast-food franchises, and department stores. Growth is expected to slow over the next several years, with a large proportion of the new hiring being done by eating and drinking establishments.[5]

Basic Manufacturing

Heavy industry and food processing declined substantially from 1965 to 1975. However, these declines were offset somewhat by increases in the high technology, metal fabrication, and machinery industries. The majority of jobs in these industries are in the crafts and operative categories.

15. SAN MATEO-REDWOOD CITY EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

The San Mateo-Redwood City employment center supports diverse economic activities. Manufacturing, especially high technology and metal fabrication, machinery and transportation equipment, is an important component of this center, employing a large percentage of crafts and operative workers.[1]

Public employment is also significant, with federal, state and county governmental offices located here. The "other" local serving-sector also accounts for a substantial percentage of this center's employment. This sector includes the construction, transportation, public utilities, finance, insurance and real estate industries.

Manufacturing

Manufacturing employs nearly one-quarter of all the workers in this employment center. Half of this employment is in high technology manufacturing, which grew 40% between 1965 and 1975. (See the Palo Alto-Sunnyvale Employment Center profile for a more detailed discussion of high technology industries.)

Professional and technical workers comprise between 25 and 40% of the employees in these industries, craft workers and operatives, approximately 30%, and sales and clerical workers, approximately 20%.[2]

The other important industries in this employment center are metal fabrication, machinery and transportation equipment, which increased its payroll 75% from 1965 to 1975. These industries employ a smaller percentage of professional and technical workers, and a larger percentage of crafts and operative workers, than the high technology industries.

Basic Non-Manufacturing

In this sector, federal and state government showed the largest increase from 1965 to 1975. This increase has leveled off, and government employment is expected to remain stable for the next several years.[3] Wholesale trade and long distance transportation have grown steadily over these years, and are expected to increase moderately in the future.[4] These two industries employ a large percentage of operatives, clerical workers, and sales workers.

Local-Serving Industries

Professional services employment increased by one-third between 1965 and 1968. This category includes health, education and legal services. Major occupations in this category are professional and technical, service workers, and clerical workers. The continually rising demand for health care will cause moderate gains in this category over the next several years.[5]

Retail trade and "other" local-serving industries each grew moderately from 1965 to 1975. Retail employment, which consists primarily of sales, clerical and service workers, will continue this modest growth.[6] In the "other" category, the finance sector, employing a large percentage of clerical workers, will also continue to grow modestly.[7]

14. SOUTH SAN FRANCISCO - SAN FRANCISCO AIRPORT EMPLOYMENT CENTER

Summary

The major economic activities in this employment center are long-distance transportation, wholesale trade, hotels, motels and restaurants: industries that benefit from the presence of San Francisco Airport. The Airport is the largest air facility in the region and serves as this employment center's focal point. The airlines are the largest employers in this center[1]. Major occupational categories for these industries are craft workers, operatives, clerical workers, and sales workers.

Basic Non-Manufacturing

The basic non-manufacturing sector accounted for 45% of this center's employment in 1975. Over half of this employment is in long-distance transportation. Air transportation is the major component of this sector. The Southern Pacific Railroad is also an important component.

The expansion of the airport in the late 1970s has tapered off, however, although growth should continue at a modest pace.[2] Significant occupations in air transportation are craft workers, operatives, clerical workers and sales workers.

Wholesale trade is also an important industry in this employment center: approximately 13% of the workers are employed in this category. Employment has grown steadily in recent years, and should continue. The majority of occupations are in the operative, clerical and sales categories.

Local-Serving Industries

The "other" local-serving industries tripled their number of employees in this center in the period 1965 to 1975. Construction of non-residential projects has been expanding, and is expected to continue. However, residential construction is expected to decrease.[3]

The most rapidly expanding industries in the "other" sector are finance, insurance and real estate, all of which employ a large percentage of clerical and sales workers. Generally, industry expansion has been the result of increases in business activity and in the local population. Thus, job growth is expected to slow down in the next several years, as the rate of business growth declines. Most new jobs will be concentrated in the finance sector.[4]

Retail trade, which employs approximately 10% of this center's workers has grown moderately in recent years. Most of the new hiring has been by apparel shops, restaurants and fast-food franchises, and department stores. Growth is expected to slow over the next several years, with a large proportion of the new hiring being done by eating and drinking establishments.[5]

Basic Manufacturing

Heavy industry and food processing declined substantially from 1965 to 1975. However, these declines were offset somewhat by increases in the high technology, metal fabrication, and machinery industries. The majority of jobs in these industries are in the crafts and operative categories.

INTRODUCTION

This section of the Directory of Jobs, Housing, and Social Services is intended to be used by housing counselors in Contra Costa, Alameda, and Santa Clara Counties advising low income people who may wish to move to a city with which they are not familiar.

Part IV of the Directory contains information about Contra Costa County and reflects the recent entrance of the Contra Costa Housing Authority into the Regional Housing Mobility Program. It is intended to be used in conjunction with Parts I, II, and III of the Directory which was first distributed in January 1981.

Richmond, San Pablo, and Pittsburg each have their own housing authority which administer the Section 8 program. These cities have not yet joined the Regional Housing Mobility Program of which this Directory is a part. Hercules does not have a Section 8 Program and has not, to date, entered into a cooperative agreement with any of the other housing authorities in the county. An entry for each of these cities is included in order to provide complete information to those people wishing to move to one of these cities.

The entry for each city contains the following information:

- o Map: a map for each city, with major thoroughfares, shopping areas, BART stations, bus routes, medical facilities, social services and colleges marked.

- o Housing: a brief description of the city, and particularly, of the housing stock in that city.

- o Shopping: a description of the neighborhood and regional shopping areas nearby. These shopping areas have been mapped, and each shoping center has a number corresponding to its number on the map. "NS" stands for neighborhood shopping, and "MS" stands for major (or regional) shopping.

- o Schools: the number of primary, intermediate and high schools in the city, and, for further information, the address and phone number of the Unified School District office for that city.

- o Child Care: the name, address, phone number, contact people and hours of the child care referrel centers for that city. Where available, a list of child care centers in the city is also included; however, the referrel centers should be contacted first.

- o Transit: information on the nearest BART stations, and on major AC Transit bus lines. Phone numbers to call for further information about routes and schedules are included.

- Social Services: where to go for housing-related problems and legal problems, and where the nearest County Department of Economic Benefits and State Unemployment Department are located. Also includes a referral number for social service agencies. The number/letter combination after the phone number is their number on the map.

- Medical Services: a list of the nearest hospitals and clinics, with codes corresponding to their codes on the map.

- Recreation: the nearest regional parks and recreation areas, community centers, libraries and neighborhood parks.

- Landlords: names and addresses of landlords and property managers who are familiar with the Section 8 Program.

Because colleges serve many jurisdictions, they are described at the end of Part IV. For the junior colleges, there is a list of the occupational fields in which courses are offered; for the four year colleges, there is a partial list of the fields in which degrees or certificates are granted. For further information, call the numbers listed.

The following sources were used for this information:

- Housing: a variety of sources, but particularly the Housing Elements of each jurisdiction's General Plan.

- Shopping: Directory of Shopping Centers in the United States and Canada, published by the National Research Bureau, Inc., Burlington, Iowa, 16th Edition, 1975.
  Updated by the local Chambers of Commerce listed in each area.

- Schools: Contra Costa Times, Sunday, February 8, 1981, pp. 16-27 and telephone contact with each school district.

- Child Care: The information was obtained from the Contra Costa Children's Council and relevant telephone books.

- Transit: The information was obtained from transit maps from BART, AC Transit, and the City of Walnut Creek.

- Social and Medical Services: ABAG, Fair Housing Directory, 1979.
  Relevant telephone books

- Recreation: The information was obtained from the California State Automobile Association's road and highway maps, and from telephone books.

- Colleges: 1979-1980 Bay Area Community College Career Guide, San Mateo County Office of Education.
  Catalogues from four year colleges.

The broader purpose of this Directory is to help expand regionwide housing mobility opportunities for low income people who may wish to move to different areas of the region for employment, health, or other reasons. Lack of knowledge about a new area is a frequent stumbling block to such mobility. Thus, this Directory, by providing basic information about shopping, social services, transit, etc., can be one aid used by counselors to help such people find housing in a suitable area.

Richmond

With a population of 70,300, Richmond is the largest city in West Contra Costa County. It is located on the peninsula which separates San Francisco Bay from San Pablo Bay. Thirty percent of the housing stock is multi-family. There are few apartments as most multi-family units are duplexes or four-plexes. The rest of the housing stock is comprised of small single-family homes, most built during the late 1940's and 1950's. A large number of these are rental units, especially those units west of Eastshore Freeway and south of West Barrett Avenue.

RE: Directory of Jobs, Housing and Social Services

This is to announce the availability of the Alameda, Santa Clara, and Contra Costa Counties Directory of Jobs, Housing and Social Services.

This Directory contains information on the following topics for each city in Alameda, Santa Clara, and Contra Costa Counties (with the exceptions of Alameda City, Berkeley, and Oakland):

- the housing stock
- shopping areas
- schools
- child care availability
- public transit
- social services
- medical facilities
- recreation facilities

A map for each city is also included, in which major thoroughfares, shopping areas, BART stations, bus routes, medical facilities, social services, and colleges are marked. Finally, the Directory contains information on job opportunities for all nine counties of the San Francisco Bay Area.

The Directory was compiled as part of the Regional Housing Mobility Program. The objective of this program is to increase housing opportunities for low income families through a Section 8 Certificate exchange process among the Housing Authorities of Alameda, Santa Clara, and Contra Costa Counties. This Directory is meant to facilitate that process by providing useful information for housing counselors working with low income families who may wish to move to an area that is unfamiliar to them. However, it contains much information that would be useful to a broad spectrum of households.

The Directory contains 355 pages of text and maps. It is designed to be placed in a three-ring binder, thus allowing new chapters to be added in the future. If you wish to order a copy, please send $22 plus $3 postage and handling to ABAG's Public Affairs Department, Hotel Claremont, Berkeley, CA 94705.
